PSYCHOTHERAPEUTIC AGENTS

New Roles for Nonprofessionals, Parents, and Teachers

Edited with commentaries by Bernard G. Guerney, Jr., Rutgers, The State University

Through articles and editorial commentary, Professor Guerney explores remedial methods and procedures based on the strategy of using nonprofessionals as trained and supervised agents of the professional psychotherapist. He presents the rationale that this revolutionary and rapidly growing approach may provide more efficient solutions for many educational, social, interpersonal, and emotional problems than do traditional approaches.

CHANGING PERSPECTIVES IN MENTAL ILLNESS

Edited by Stanley C. Plog, Behavior Science Corporation, California, and Robert B. Edgerton, University of California, Los Angeles

Leading researchers and theoreticians question many of the contemporary theories about mental health and illness—including whether or not the term "mental illness" is appropriate. Their articles describe contemporary knowledge and major theoretical positions relative to the importance of cultural, social, and psychophysiological causes of mental illness.

CLINICAL INFORMATION PROCESSING BY COMPUTER

An Essay and Selected Readings

By Benjamin Kleinmuntz, Carnegie-Mellon University

Focusing on selected applications of computers in clinical decision-making, Professor Kleinmuntz combines an essay on the use and potential utility of these machines with appropriate readings written by scientists active in the field.

March 1969 160 pp. $6.50 (tent.)

THEORY AND RESEARCH IN ABNORMAL PSYCHOLOGY

Edited by David Rosenhan, Swarthmore College, and Perry London, University of Southern California

As in their earlier volume, Foundations of Abnormal Psychology, the editors consider abnormality in its fullest breadth, including not only what is traditionally called psychopathology, but also such "positive abnormalities" as creativity, intelligence, and constructive social traits. The collection includes basic papers on learning, reinforcement, emotion, anxiety, and punishment, as well as on specific abnormal processes and their amelioration.

January 1969 512 pp. $5.00 paper (tent.)

VOCATIONAL BEHAVIOR

Readings in Theory and Research

Edited by Donald G. Zytowski, Iowa State University of Science and Technology

Concerned with both research and theory, this compendium of readings offers a panorama of the vocational field. The editors have approached their subject area with an interdisciplinary point of view, synthesizing theories from such fields as psychoanalysis and utility theory.

CASEBOOK ON ETHICAL STANDARDS FOR PSYCHOLOGISTS

The application of the 19 principles comprising the Code of Ethics for all psychologists is presented. Each principle is illustrated by actual, but disguised, cases involving alleged violations of the principle and action taken by the Committee on Scientific and Professional Ethics and Conduct.

Four Appendixes state and amplify the additional principles applicable to specific areas of psychology:

—Ethical Practices in Industrial Psychology
—Automated Test Scoring and Interpretation Practices
—Standards for APA Directory Listings of Private Practice
—Guiding Principles for the Humane Care and Use of Animals

The arrangement of the Casebook into a general section of cases and four additional specific sections increases its versatility as a reference book for individuals and as a text for instructional purposes.
